The NMFS finds that the petition, viewed in the context of information readily available in our files, presents substantial scientific or commercial information indicating that the petitioned action may be warranted. To ensure that the status review is comprehensive, the NMFS is soliciting scientific and commercial information regarding this species from any interested party.	Analysis: NMFS Response to Petition filed in Jan. 2024 by Washington State environmental organization; agency took action although it said the petition 'contained numerous factual errors, omissions, incomplete references, and unsupported assertions and conclusions.' Notes

In February 2024, in Montana, a man ran over a wolf with a snowmobile, then tortured the animal, showed her off at a bar before she died, for which he received a $250 fine. The incident provoked international outrage, and was used to argue this FWS finding was flawed. An April 22, 2024 notice of intent to sue FWS cites this incident to support its contention that wolves have become so politicized and thus are vulnerable, a factor not considered by FWS.

FWS announces a finding on the gray wolf (Canis lupus) in the Northern Rocky Mountains (NRM) and in the Western United States. After a thorough review of the best available scientific and commercial data, FWS finds that gray wolves within the NRM area do not, on their own, represent a valid listable entity; therefore, the NRM is not warranted for listing under the ESA. FWS finds that the gray wolf in the Western United States is a valid listable entity; however, the gray wolf in the Western United States does not meet the definition of an endangered species or a threatened species. Thus, FWS finds that listing the gray wolf in the Western United States is not warranted at this time.
